We used this in May when we were there with our 3 boys, two diagnosed with asd. It was a god send, definitely helped calm then, so we could continue our day, with minimal meltdowns 😊

Message from Mum: Yes it was total calm. I guess harley was spoilt being the only one in there but it's places like this that are needed - not just for children but for older people too. He was a child once and the differences and difficulties he had as a child haven't gone away as he has got older. If anything his sensory needs are more enhanced. It was lovely to be able to take "time out" in a quiet space and Harley benefitted from it massively. Thank you 😊 I am already checking out some of your products.....

With the kids at

@LEGOLANDWindsor both my kids are on the Autistic Spectrum and have just discovered the @totalsensory room

What a fantastic idea! Sure helps the kids calm down from the noise of the park... I hope more theme parks have the same facilities in the future

The Laser Raiders ride access queue environment is awful for people with sensory needs. The last time we attempted it my son lasted 5 minutes in the dark, crowded tunnel before tearfully saying he needed to go to the sensory room. On the plus side, it was the first time he had verbalised that he was not able to cope and how to make himself feel better. The sensory room is a fantastic addition to the park 😊👍

Amazing work Total Sensory this room really helped calm my daughter after being in a busy crowd, she was very relaxed when leaving, thank you for making her time at Official LEGOLAND

Windsor more fun and calm ❤️
